Dudes on Foods is a sanctuary for the modern-day man who loves to eat, drink, cook, and talk about food. We are based out of New York City, D.C., and now Boston, therefore you may find many of our posts reflective of the local beat. Your comments are encouraged and always welcomed. Eat up Dudes!

Kenzo Estate

A lot of times, wine is lost on the average American. And I mean that with the utmost sincerity and humility, for I too am a neophyte in the world of wine.

Our ignorance is regrettable, because we (us Americans) certainly make some of the best juice in the world.

A week or so ago, I had the pleasure of touring Kenzo Estates in Napa. This beautiful winery is one of the greatest places I've ever visited. The staff is so approachable and friendly and what's most important is they are happy to teach you about wine.

I've been to plenty of wine tastings and generally, you hear the same things over and over again. But never in layman's terms because there is and has always been a certain air of arrogance in wine. Well if you are like me, new to wine and hungry for knowledge, Kenzo Estates is probably the best place to get your geek on.

I couldn't recommend a finer winery to take you on a tour, and sit with you through your tasting of their estate wines.

They approach the grape, the harvest, the fermenting, the aging, all in easy to follow language. You never feel out of place or out of touch with the experience. It's truly great wine by great people.
